Join us in Celebrating Open Access Week

Open Access Week is a global initiative to celebrate the role of Open Access in making peer reviewed research more accessible, more equitable, and more transparent. 2022 Open Access Week (24 – 30 October) was about “Open for Climate Justice” to “encourage connection and collaboration among the climate movement and the international open community, as sharing knowledge is a human right, and tackling the climate crisis requires the rapid exchange of knowledge across geographic, economic, and inter-disciplinary boundaries.”

“As climate change becomes more of a concern, the open access movement is having a significant impact on the advancement of illness treatment and prevention.”

We, at Jaypee Journals promote Open Access medical publishing, and are committed to accelerate the flow of information, making it more accessible and improving the lives of people around the world especially the less privileged countries where latest medical breakthroughs take a long time to reach. Open access helps ensure that healthcare providers and researchers can continue to make discoveries and publish their findings, leading to greater awareness about climate change.

What does it mean to be Open?

- Free to access for anyone with internet connection
- Not always free to re-use depending on the copyright/ license terms.

- Readers can freely download, cite, share and re-use the articles for non-commercial purposes.
- Publish your articles in our Diamond Open Access/ Green Open Access journals portfolio.
- Articles get more visibility, readership, downloads and citations.
- Flexibility to share early through our online first route and accelerate collaboration.
- Your work shapes public policy as policymakers can use your findings!

Busting the Open Access Myths

Myth 1#: Articles in Open Access journals are not peer-reviewed and lack quality.

Busted: Most Open Access journals follow a peer review policy, and this information will be found on the journal/ publisher webpage.

At Jaypee journals, we follow double/ triple blind peer review process and ensures high quality of the articles published.

Myth 2# Open Access journals charge exorbitant publishing fees.

Busted: Publishing in open access does not necessarily mean you have to burn a hole in your pocket. There are many journals that do not charge publishing fees, and some journals offer OA waiver, OA membership schemes, green open access options too!

At Jaypee journals, you can publish your research in our Diamond Open Access journals portfolio with no publishing fee! Or also in Green Open Access where the fee is really minimal...

Myth 3 # Open Access articles are not copyrighted; everyone is free to re-use the content.

Busted: Open Access articles are copyrighted and there are licensing terms to re-use the articles. The copyright of the OA articles can be owned by the authors or the journal or the publishers, requiring permission to re-use the article.

At Jaypee journals, authors own the copyright of the article, and everyone is free to re-use the article without permission for non-commercial purposes although the copyright of the journal as entity belongs to the publisher.

Myth 4#: Open access benefits readers and not authors.

Busted: Open access provides free access to readers; however, this increases readership, citations, which in turn boosts the author's scholarly profile.

At Jaypee journals, we have published ~24,300 articles and 59,089 authors have benefitted from publishing with us.
